

MIKE VICK SIGNS WITH THE AFFL

By ROB MAADDI Associated Press

LIFE after football hits some NFL players harder than others. For Michael Vick, the 36-year-old is adjusting to his post-NFL career in a different way.

Vick, the dynamic four-time Pro Bowl quarterback who was honoured with a retirement ceremony by the Atlanta Falcons last week, isn't hanging up the cleats just yet. He signed with the American Flag Football League as both a player and adviser for the 7-on-7 organisation that debuts in 2018. He's planning to play in a demonstration game Tuesday at Avaya Stadium in San Jose, California.

"I think it's great being a retired NFL player (and having) another outlet, to have a chance to go play football and be competitive," Vick told The Associated Press. "It's flag. I don't have to worry about getting hit. I don't have to worry about serious injuries. I can just throw the football. I don't have to really run around. You can just sit back (in the pocket), make reads, and have fun throwing touchdowns. That's the way we played in the backyard, growing up."

The AFFL's plan is to field eight league-owned teams in 2018.

"The league eliminates the traditional physical limitations of tackle football, creating a platform for players who have elite athletic ability and speed, regardless of their size," said AFFL founder Jeffrey Lewis.

Vick, who turns 37 next month, last played in the NFL with Pittsburgh in 2015. He led the Steelers to a 2-1 record in three starts filling in for Ben Roethlisberger. "I'm satisfied with my career and what I've been able to do," Vick said.

Flag football playoffs all set, postseason starts on Sunday

GRAB THE FLAG: Flag football players (men and women) compete in the Bahamas Flag Football League at the Winton Rugby Field. The playoff picture has been set and the postseason begins this Sunday.
