Tracy Morgan, star of the NBC's "30 Rock" and "Saturday Night Live", will be taking to the stage at Atlantis this Saturday.

Following a deadly motor accident in June 2014 involving a tractor-trailer, Morgan was in a coma for two weeks. The crash killed Morgan's friend and collaborator, 62-year-old comedian James McNair. Since then, the comedian has been steadily recovering and has returned to his career. Fans around the world eagerly awaited his comeback.

Currently on tour with a stand-up show, and alongside stars like Tiffany Haddish ("Girls Trip") in the hit show "The Last G" on TBS – Morgan was selected as the Atlantis Live Memorial Day weekend highlight performance due to his long legacy within the comedy circuit, his relevance among local audiences, and above all, his unique ability to make people laugh.

"Atlantis has always been the premier provider of live entertainment shows and we are constantly researching premier entertainment experiences for our guests and community. Jerry Seinfeld, Jay Leno, Charlie Murphy and Kathy Griffin are some of the biggest names in comedy that the Atlantis has hosted. However, beyond comedy, Atlantis has hosted a number of acts including but not limited to: Diana Ross, John Legend, Katie Perry, and Justin Bieber," said Cara Douglas, director of On-Island Marketing at Atlantis.

She said Atlantis knows that it is important to stand a part and is happy to continue offering new and fresh experiences to both its guests and the local community.

For people that usually patronise the comedy shows hosted at Atlantis, Cara said the feedback always includes comments like: "Great production quality, excellently executed, professionally managed, timely, world-class."

Tickets for the upcoming show can be purchased at the Atlantis Box Office in the Coral Towers, or by e-mailing box.office@atlantisparadise.com. Suggested age for the audience is 18 and over; this is a no cell phone show.
